Synopsis of the Armenian Message

(Revelation 3:1-6)

The fifth letter is addressed to the church at Sardis. The speaker, Christ, is identified as the one holding the “seven spirits of God” and the “seven stars.” The seven spirits refers to the Holy Spirit who is one in essence, and the seven stars are the seven churches. This means that Christ by the power of the Holy Spirit controls the seven churches and their messengers. Christ knows that this church has a “reputation of being alive, but it is dead.” This church from the outside looks like it is alive and well, yet spiritually it is dead. The verdict against it is that Christ has not found its deeds complete in the sight of God. The prescription for their problem is that they need to wake up, strengthen what remains, and repent before He comes upon them. If they do that, He promises them white garments and that their name will be confessed before the Father.

The message for the church of today is that we need to be careful about the inner spiritual condition of the church. A church can look very busy and active on the outside, but can be spiritually bankrupt and dead on the inside. God cares more about the inner spiritual condition than how much activity there is at a certain church. Considering that a church is the body of believers that assemble in it, this tells us that Christ is talking about the inner spiritual condition of the members of the church. The message is to wake up and strengthen what remains before it dies. The questions I have for you, “Is this letter descriptive of our church?” “In what spiritual condition are you?” and “What are you doing to develop yourself spiritually?”
